

2007 Delaware River Sojourn

Lackawaxen River Safety Regulations

Lackawaxen River White Water – June 25, 2007

- For the first time the Delaware River Sojourn will be paddling on the Lackawaxen River, a tributary to the Delaware.
- The stretch we will be paddling has Class I, Class II, and Class II+ rapids.
- People who want to paddle their own boats on the Lackawaxen will have to demonstrate white water paddling proficiency on Day 1 of the Sojourn (June 24, 2007). You cannot paddle your own canoe or kayak on the Lackawaxen without participating in Day 1's proficiency demonstration.
- Helmets will be required for all kayakers and paddlers in closed canoes, which are outfitted with flotation air bags. These paddlers must provide their own whitewater helmets. If your canoe is not considered closed, helmets are not required.
- Everyone else will paddle in rafts; helmets are not required for paddlers in rafts.

Don't miss this rare opportunity to paddle the fabled Lackawaxen River ~ known for its canyon-like walls, eagles, fly fishing, exciting rapids, and its scenic beauty.
